

ECOPSYCHOANALYSIS: PSYCHOANALYTIC PERSPECTIVES ON THE CLIMATE CRISIS

with Skye Haberman, PsyD

A VIRTUAL COURSE

COURSE DESCRIPTION

In this course (1) we will look at understanding unconscious obstacles and attitudes underpinning the emergence of and inadequate response to the global ecological crisis, patterns of over consuming, our own feelings and defenses including theories of dissociation, self-states, and loss; and consider ways to work with climate destruction in clinical practice (2) we will explore the connection between environmental exploitation and the economic priorities of carbon based capitalism and white western culture, including racism/colonialism and impact on people of color and (3) we will discuss ecological awareness and values, ways to face the challenge of climate catastrophe, build community, and the evocation of "creative white shame".

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

1. Develop a greater understanding of unconscious biases and obstacles in relationship to tackling the climate crisis.
2. Discuss ways to identify and work with our own range of feelings and defenses.
3. Increase awareness of the relationship between racism, a carbon bases, extractive capitalist economy and the climate crisis.
4. Explore ways to work with environmental issues clinically.
